Colorado State University Extension will be hosting a series of educational workshops where agricultural producers can learn about practices their families can use to reduce financial, production and human risks during tough economic times.

Colorado State University Extension recently received a grant to provide "Managing Tough Times: How Can Your Family Be More Resilient?" educational workshops for farm and ranch families and training workshops for extension agents, bankers, lenders and other professionals.

The eastern plains workshop will be presented Tuesday, Nov. 23 at the Washington County Fairgrounds Event Center in Akron from 5-8 p.m.

Workshops presenters include Norm Dalsted, professor and extension farm and ranch management economist at CSU; Bruce Bosley, Logan and Morgan County Extension agent; John Deering, CSU Extension specialist.

Also, Bob Fetsch, CSU Extension specialist, who will provide the latest research-based practical strategies that agricultural producers can use to reduce the financial, production and human risk.

For more information about these upcoming "Managing Tough Times" workshops, contact Fetsch at 970-491-5648 or robert.fetsch@colostate.edu.

Register for the workshop by contacting Bosley at 970-522-3200, ext. 285 or bruce.bosley@colostate.edu.
