Those who see their roses die every year, find out why during a special workshop scheduled for Monday, Feb. 13 at 5:30 p.m. at the Social Services building in Holyoke.

Participants will learn the best practices for roses old and new. They will also learn about new types of roses, gain accurate research-based information and expert advice from some of the leading companies that grow and breed roses in the United States.

Much more information will be available, and participants will get hands on experience with cutting of certain roses which they will take home.

There is a charge for the workshop. Pre-register by Wednesday, Feb. 8. For questions regarding the workshop, call Linda Langelo at 854-3616.
